360USAINC.COM FINDS ITS PLACE WITHIN THE MYSPACE COMMUNITY

Online magazine for the disabled community joins the growing list of MySpace.com members to further expand their web presence.

March 13, 2007 - 360USAInc, the online source for the disabled community, has increased its accessibility with a new presence on MySpace.com. Viewers can now visit www.MySpace.com/360usainc to further increase their online social network.

MySpace.com sports the tagline, "A place for friends," which is in keeping with 360USA's aspirations of globally joining the disabled community. 360USA's founder, Jennifer Ruf views this as a further step in keeping the disabled community connected. Says Ruf, "Now that 360USA is part of the MySpace generation, our readers can easily share opinions and comments, tell us what products and articles they'd like to see on our site, and best of all, support each other."

Debuting with an appeal to bloggers, MySpace.com has now amassed a mainstream following, becoming one of the most popular sites on internet. It continues to grow its brand as an "online social club," with millions of members sharing comments, pictures, music and more. Potential members can sign up for free by creating a customized profile. Once membership has been established, they can add pictures, create blogs, and interact with online friends.
